Correction – there are 3 (not 4) active assessments/clean-ups on-going in Colorado and the 3 planned assessments

A little bit on the mines – the info I have from region 8 this morning is that we have 4 active assessments and/or removals underway in Colorado and another 3 assessments slated. I sent along more detail on this to Arian so she will have it for you.

This is great thanks. Let's make sure to relook at the factsheets. These numbers look much more realistic and I don't want others getting the wrong impression about the seriousness of our response.

Few things as you keep plugging.

A sentence of two to talk about David's experience would be good

Can we explain why a mobile lab won't help?

The question on the mines is whether or not EPA or others are taking similar actions to investigate that could lead to a similar occurrence. The other question that is obvious is do we develop mitigation plans when we do wit like this. These are questions I just really need to manage.

If asked what do I say about a timeline for a comprehensive cleanup plan?

Administrator,

In response to the questions you posed last evening we are preparing this quick sheet that touches on most, if not all of them. There are some gaps so we will continue to refine this.
